The MHCC will distribute a Public Health and Medical (Emergency Function 8) Situation Report related to influenza on Wednesday of every week.

WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

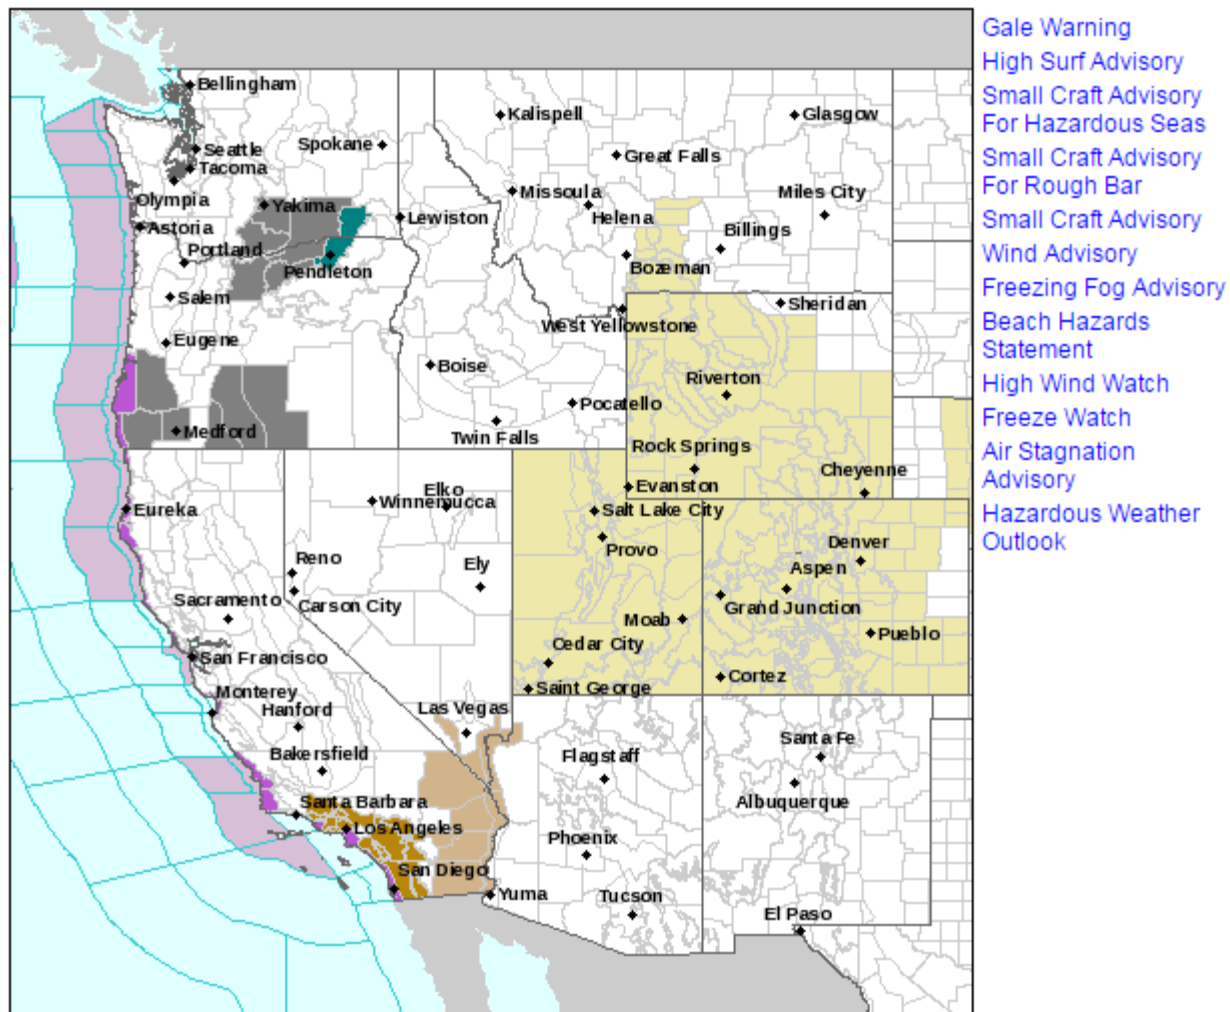

A weak low pressure system is passing over the region this morning. The main impact will continue to be in the eastern mountains where skies are mostly cloudy and scattered light snow showers will continue into the afternoon before skies begin to clear. Central and western areas will be partly cloudy with a few isolated mountain rain showers through midday. Strong high pressure will build overhead starting tonight and a warming and drying trend will take place through early next week. At this time it appears that the storm track will return to the region by next Tuesday night or Wednesday and wet unsettled weather will last through the end of next week.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

A ridge of high pressure building into California from the Pacific Ocean will bring a warming and drying trend to the region through Monday. Maximum temperatures will be around 5 degrees below normal today, with mid 30s to mid 40s across the mountains and mid 50s to mid 60s in the valleys. Temperatures will be near normal Friday and then become above normal Saturday through Monday with 70s in the valleys of Southern California. Minimum humidity will be between 20% and 40% today and then drop into the single digits and teens away from the San Joaquin Valley Friday through Monday. Isolated snow showers will occur over the Sierra from Fresno County northward through this evening as a trough drops south through the Great Basin. North to east winds of 20 to 40 mph with gusts to 60 mph will surface across the mountains and below the canyons and passes of Southern California Friday morning through Saturday afternoon as the trough moves to the south of the region and the ridge builds in. These offshore winds will weaken to 15 to 30 mph with gusts to 50 mph and become less widespread Saturday evening through Sunday night. Winds will become light across the entire area by Monday afternoon. Temperatures will cool a little Tuesday as the ridge of high pressure weakens. A Pacific trough will bring significant cooling and showers to the area Wednesday through the end of next week.
